

APPENDIX 3.3A

Reconnaissance-level Architectural Survey

---

Appendix 3.3A

Water Supply Line Route

The proposed water line runs south on Taylor surrounded by industrial sites. Turning east on Main Street the industrial buildings continue on the north side with the buildings becoming more recent along the route. The south side of Main Street is 1950s residential. At the west end of the route along Main Street is a field on the north and a row of palms from an earlier development on the south.

Photograph 1. Main Street camera facing west; AES Highgrove site is visible in mid-right.

Michigan Avenue between Main Street and Center Street has a row of older residences on the east. According to USGS mapping this side of Michigan Avenue had a string of residences in orchards by 1951. Based on windshield recognizance, three of these may need additional surveying. 140 Michigan is a small Craftsman home on a brick foundation. The side-gabled home has a front-gabled porch. The home has been modified with replacement metal sliding windows.

Photograph 2. 140 Michigan Avenue camera facing northeast.

150-160 Michigan is set back from the road and obscured by vegetation. The concrete house has a wood gable and front-gabled entry porch.

Photograph 3. 150-160 Michigan Avenue camera facing northeast.

206 Michigan is a small ranch-style house most likely dating from the 1940s. Many of the house's details remain intact, including a hip tile roof and metal frame divided casement windows.

Photograph 4. 206 Michigan Avenue camera facing east.

The west side of Michigan Avenue had only two buildings until the 1970s. One of these 15 Michigan Avenue remains. It is a mission revival house that may be a remnant farm house of the orchard that once occupied this area.

Photograph 5. 15 Michigan Avenue camera facing west.

The church to the south was built between the 1950s and 1970s. The residential development west of Michigan Avenue between Sanriva Avenue and Center Street was built in the 1970s.

Michigan Avenue was extended south of Center Street after the 1970s. This area features modern subdivisions.